FOREWORD

TODAY we have but one aim, victory!
To gain this triumph, we must work, we must give, and we must sacrifice to the end that some day all peoples everywhere may know the light of security and liberty and peace.

DEDICATION

WITH pride we dedicate the 1943 "Kenitorial" to Kenmore High School's faculty members, alumni, and former students now serving with our armed forces on the far-flung battle fields of the world. May we on the home front be worthy of their sacrifices.

ADMINISTRATION

THE ADMINISTRATION is faced with many additional problems as a result of the war. It has become necessary to re-examine education for its content and to add new courses pertinent to our war effort. The administration must now equip students for war and peace. It must give them not only education, but courage and faith in America, to carry into war; and it must teach them the principles of democracy to give them a capability for making an intelligent peace after the war.

First row: Mr. Frank C. Densberger, superintendent of schools; Dr. Elmer L. Sleeper, trustee; Mr. Allen B. Rae, district clerk and business manager; Mrs. Mildred L. Clements, president; Mr. F. Paul Norton, attorney; Dr. Laverne H. Brucker, vice-president; Mr. George D. Liles, trustee; Mr. George F. Wallace, Sr., trustee.

Not in the picture: Miss Doris Buddenhagen, treasurer.

"The Kenitorial" wishes to express here its deepest sympathy to the family and friends of whose passing removed an efficient and friendly hand from the business management of the Kenmore public schools.

NO organization can function efficiently without a group of hard-working persons behind it. So it is with Kenmore High School, and that seldom-seen group which is responsible for the efficient running of the school, the Board of Education.

This year the Board suffered a great loss in the untimely death of Mr. Kenneth O. Irvin. Since the year 1920, Mr. Irvin had served as clerk of the Board, and since 1934 he had held the position of business manager of the school district. Mr. Irvin's death was keenly felt by all who knew him.

The first class to go all the way through the new building is graduating this year. The fact that school spirit is so great here is due to the fostering of this spirit by the splendid work of the Board of Education, the school officials, and the faculty.

Mr. Freeman's Twenty-fifth Year

On the occasion of his anniversary of twenty-five years of service with the Kenmore schools, Mr. Roy G. Freeman, Mrs. Freeman, and Richard Freeman receive a "Kenitorial" photographer into their home.

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO Mr. Roy G. Freeman came to the Kenmore school system as a regular teacher. Our principal then constituted the math and science departments in the Washington school. That was in 1918 and then there were approximately only sixty students registered in the four-year high school. Compare this with our present 1250 registration on a three-year basis. Among others, he taught Mr. George Dobson and Major Victor Owen, present members of the Kenmore High School faculty, the last of whom is now in the armed forces. He remembers also many others faculty members who went through the Kenmore system, but whom he didn't actually teach. It was in the present junior high school building in 1924 that Mr. Freeman became the principal of the high school.

Over the years he has seen many changes. These changes he notices particularly among the students. According to Mr. Freeman, the students today have much more poise, self-assurance, and confidence than students used to have. The only preference he has for the "old days" is the smaller school. "In a group as large as ours has grown to be," Mr. Freeman said, "a principal only comes in contact with a very small part of the entire group. In a smaller school a principal knows almost every student."

"The Kenitorial," on behalf of the student body and the faculty, wishes to extend to Mr. Freeman its congratulations on this, his twenty-fifth anniversary of being with the Kenmore schools, and its sincerest hope that this is merely the first of many anniversaries.

SENIOR PLAY

Taking their cue from the prompter, the Gibbises, the Webbs, and some of the other folks of "Our Town" posed for their "portrait" while Miss Eve Strong, the drama coach, gestured with despair.

Class History

Elected in October 1942 were the senior officers. In November Queen Jackie Knibloe and M. C. "Clint" Buehlman highlighted the Senior Carnival. Next, in keeping with the season, we held a Christmas Dance. Following this, the senior play, "Our Town," was presented.

Because of the world conditions it was thought wise to keep activities this year on a war-time scale.

Seniors are planning their final social activity, designating the termination of our three years. It brings with it a pang of joy and a pang of regret - - joy for the future which must see the reconstruction of our world, and regret for the happy days which are left behind us.

June 15, 2083.

Dear Sirs:

Your recent letter of July 8, 2081 has just now come into my hands. The letter is about two years old. Consequently, I shall refresh your memory by telling you what you wrote. Your "Academy of Old Studies," it seems, is interested in compiling a list of outstanding men and women who were not Egyptians. At least, it was interested two years ago. Nevertheless, you could not have come to a better place for there are no Egyptians among that class of people here in Kenmore known as "successful." As a matter of fact, we don't even KNOW any Egyptians. Perhaps we aren't living well rounded lives.

It was in 1953 that Kenmore really developed into the giant city that it is today, and the sudden growth has been accredited to an amazingly talented group of young people who, strangely enough, all graduated from the old Highland Avenue Kenmore High School in the same year, which was 1943. The first move in the rebuilding of the then tiny village came in the spring of 1953 when Fred Weller, a brilliant young lawyer of the times (he was but 27), addressed the masses in the auditorium of the old senior high school on Highland Parkway. Weller's sincerity convinced the folks that Kenmore was at a definite disadvantage in being smaller than near-by Buffalo. He outlined a plan for bringing Niagara Falls to Kenmore, but the idea was proved to be impractical by James Boyle. Boyle's firm stand was followed by Avery Smith's motion that the meeting be adjourned. The motion was seconded by Jim Gillen, thus closing the most revolutionary meeting ever held in the small town. Refreshments were served by Connie Foley, Charlotte Anderson, Jane Thomas and Betty Ignaz, all under the supervision of Fay Tracey.

Following the meeting with fast action, Roger Moore, Olympic star, rallied the people behind him, and in a week Kenmore had grown to twice its original size. And do you know why? I thought not! The reason was that Moore had picked the best men in each field to help improve Kenmore. A mild mannered engineer, Walter Voisinnet, had planned every move in the construction of the glorious new buildings, and the materials for these buildings were all spectacular new plastics created by the brilliant non-Egyptian research chemist, Robert Rustay.

During this busy week, Weller himself had not been sleeping. He had conferred secretly with General Johnny Snyder and Admiral Chuck Dobony, and details were worked out for an invasion of the rival city, Buffalo. Admiral Dobony in only three days was in control of all five of the Great Lakes. Then General Snyder captured Buffalo in no time at all and went on from there to play a season as "Mac" in MACBETH.

Medium sized Kenmore grew in still other ways. Enterprising business men and financiers made Kenmore a center of wealth and power. Daring, sharp as a needle, Dennis McCoskrie played havoc with Wall Street to such an extent that every man in the Stock Exchange trembled at the sound of his crisp thousand dollar bills. Under McCoskrie's insistent demands, Wall Street was extended to go through Kenmore, in order that Dennis might have a shorter walk to his office. Our museum has an exhibit of autographed I. O. U.'s presented by this famous Kenmore graduate. Also in the museum are three two-hundred-mile-an-hour locomotives (now obsolete) that were used by Commodore Austin Bush, the shrewd developer of the American Central Railroad system, the only railroad now operating in the United States.

Also in 1953, Jim Babcock bought the Columbus Red Birds, baseball team of the American Association. This gave him the expensive distinction of owning every baseball team in the country. Possibly more outstanding is the fact that John Christie managed them all, while his brother, Archie Christie, played on all of them.

Kenmore was not at a standstill politically either. Jim Biggie served six terms as President of the United States, during which time he crusaded for student control of teachers and all-day assemblies. Meanwhile, Pat Enright was Secretary of State, performing with all the ability of John Quincy Adams or Cordell Hull. Pat gave up an enviable position in the advertising game to help her country. Miss Enright proved that her political science course in college was no mistake.

Prophecy

In 1955, even more of these 1943 graduates became prominent. This time it was in the fields of science, medicine, and sports. Bill Jacobs blasted old, outdated ideas on psychiatry and set himself up in a profitable practice, helping such tired business men as Jack Zimmerman, Donald Dohn and James Kaiser to carry on with as much energy as ever in their respective enterprises. In later years, Jacobs kept many English teachers from insanity, a feat never before accomplished. Robert Bodkin, a rival psychiatrist, did the same thing for English students. Bodkin also played the piano. Late in the summer of 1955, Marian Layer won the Nobel prize for nursing. At about that time, Bob Johnston, Ted Powell, and Del Baskin made synthetic air for synthetic rubber tires. Their contribution supplied the missing punch to the automobile industry, which shortly before had come under the control of Jim Folsom. Folsom's boyhood pal, Irving Haag, was out in Hollywood starring in a romantic film with glamour girls, Marge Yocum, Beverly Young, and Helen Doelman. Athletically, Spencer Nease's Baseball School was turning out the very best in future professional ball players and Dick Amsden was capturing speed skating championships from coast to coast. Kenmore's fame, together with the fame of its builders and townspeople, was echoed around the world by the potent news syndicate energetically headed by June Shaw and Ruth Murphy. One of their best circulation stunts was to have Walter Bickerton sitting on the flagpole of the Kenmore Hotel Statler, reading a copy of the girls' local paper, "The Kenmore Dependent Record."

Even in radio, Kenmorites made headlines. Helen Sleeper, encouraged by her success in "You Can't Take It With You," became the star of the dramatic production, "Third Husband," taking up right where Helen Mencken (who was not from Kenmore) left off. Vivian Green, Helen's girlhood chum, was doing the lead in "How Green Was My Valley," which had been broken down into serial form. A strictly novel touch, even for radio, was that President Jim Biggie sang during his fireside chats. On the fourth floor of the museum, under a protective coating of dust, is the famous eighty-foot dory used by Bill McQuillin, Ronny Jones, and Norris MacDowell, those gallant adventurers who sailed to India in search of rare perfumes for the Enchantment Cosmetics Company founded by Shirley Farr. She was the only woman member of the National Capitalists' Union. The union was a brain child of the economic expert, Paul Cramton. Paul figured it was time for the capitalists to get a chance at collective bargaining.

Every morsel of food consumed by our mighty little town was through the courtesy of the scientific agricultural wizard, Gordon Inskip, who owned and operated three whole states for the sole purpose of raising field after field of bright, green vitamins.

Surely the people of Egypt, the land of Cleopatra, remember the American Good Will Ambassadors to Egypt, Dorothy Maxwell, Jacklyn Knibloe, and Betty Domedion. Who could forget them?

The members of the Academy of Old Studies may be well impressed with the outstanding people of the Kenmore High School Class of 1943. Their influence has been felt throughout the world during the past century or so, but the most influential of all, was dentist Jim Weig who had more pull than anybody. Sports fans remember him as the young man who, at the age of seventy, swam the Atlantic Ocean — and on a stormy night, too! Of course, he was convoyed by Commander Lionel Noel and his submarine fleet.

Well, academy members, there is the whole story. I hope this report on outstanding people in Kenmore (who were not Egyptians) will help you in getting together a halfway decent chart of statistics on your project. Further data on the group may be found in the 1943 KENITORIAL, of which we have the only remaining copy. It is valued at $50,000. We'll gladly lend it to you.

If I have been a little late in answering your letter I apologize, but you must remember that I am very busy keeping things in order around the museum.

Sincerely yours,

Fred Lounsberry

SENIORS' SOPH HOP--- GRAND MARCH

Each putting his best foot forward, Princess Pat Streng and Prince Joe Sweeney led the grand march of the class of '43's Soph Hop.

Class Will—

Two archeologists are just handing the recently discovered record of the will of the class of 1943 to the officers of the class of 2043 of Kenmore Senior High School. It is in the form of a phonograph record, and the officers will now place it on their plastic phonograph.

Let's listen, too!

"We, the class of 1943, who are about to graduate from Kenmore Senior High School, being of sound mind and body, do ordain and establish this, our last will and testament.

- A. The entire senior class leaves the good times it has had these past three years to all senior classes.
 - B. Lois James and Art Aungst leave two pairs of well-worn dancing shoes (on receipt of No. 17 ration coupon).
 - C. Sue Forsey and Jane Hunter leave a bottle of vitamin "V" (vim, vigor, and vitality) pills to anyone who thinks he can keep up the pace.
 - D. Pat Zurbrick, Ruth Murphy, and Marge Kreher leave their remarkable ability to be friendly on all occasions.
 - E. To whoever is lucky enough to find it, Les Barrett leaves a slightly chewed, but still tasty, wad of Double-Bubble gum in room 324. In the same room Doug Adams and Wesley Carr leave a well-worn copy of "Superman" comics.
 - F. Jack and Joe Sweeney leave a thoroughly-thumbed address book (with telephone numbers of all available blondes, brunettes, and redheads in Kenmore).
 - G. June Shaw, Betty Fischer, Jean Stanton, and Marge Schleuse donate their book on "How to Compile an Interesting Kenitorial."
 - H. The cast of "Our Town" leaves one little blue ticket to the senior play.
 - I. Barbara Marion, Marge Yocum, and Doris Watson leave a carefully listed index of all the "moron" jokes told during the second lunch period.
 - J. For the success of all Senior Carnivals, Fred Lounsberry leaves Clinton Buehlman and his effervescent wit.
 - K. Jim Aspinall leaves his latest style fad for the young-man-about-high-school; namely, a "tweedy-tuxedo." This costume consists of a tuxedo and a tweedy shirt.
 - L. We leave Percy Cook still wondering if there is any culture or love of beauty in "Our Town" — Kenmore.
 - M. Hal Capen, Jack Lillico, and Harlan Jaquays leave a well-beaten path on Delaware Avenue, "Wolves' Paradise."
 - N. For an evening of enjoyment we leave Danny Bogart's sentimental sax and Bill Bridenbecker's torrid trumpet Blended with this "inspiring" music we leave the lilting voices of Mary Patterson and Edith Gordon joining in a refrain of "Rose O'Farrell."
 - O. Jack Barnes and Bill Walters leave a carefully written book, "The Brooklyn Bridge — How to Sell It." This masterpiece was written after the failure of their last book, "The San Francisco Golden Gate Bridge — How to Sell It."
 - P. Art Catlin leaves his ambition to operate the Kenmore theater. After this is accomplished, he intends to have "Bingo," "Bango," "Wango," and free dishes every night.
 - Q. Dorothy Scott and Joyce Morehouse, champion airplane spotters, leave their ability to detect the difference between birds, planes, and kites, while all are at high altitudes.
 - R. Two swell troupers, Sally Vervaeke and Pat Gillian, leave their talents for acting even the most difficult roles.
 - S. Ben Kendall leaves his record of being able to ski down the slopes of a Mexican sundae without knocking any of the peanuts off. Anyone who feels that he is capable of breaking this record report to Mr. Seikmann when the first marshmallows begin to fall.
 - T. Jean Dusthimer and Phyllis MacLaren leave their knowledge of how to attract members of the opposite sex by fluttering one eyelash.
 - U. Edna Saylor leaves a copy of her diary, "My Week." It is considered, next to Hugh Bell's "Theory on the Radioactivity of Radio," as a great literary epic.
 - V. Larry Benken leaves a loaded cap pistol to anyone who has a Jap hunting license or to anyone who has received his Little Boy Ranney decoder button.
 - W. Our claims to basketball fame, Bob Marafino and Bob van Summern, leave their ability to shoot a basket while catching the eye of all the pretty girls in the gallery.
 - X. Joe O'Donnell leaves his talent for solving the problem of putting two parts of hydrogen with one part of oxygen and getting a lemon coke.
 - Y. To all students who get the Monday morning blues we leave the sparkling humor of Dottie Woodworth.
 - Z. We leave a shovel so you can uncover this will from the ruins of Kenmore Senior High School.
- We hereby affix our signatures to this, our last will and testament."

The Class of 1943

After listening with solemnity to the record of the will, the officers of the class of 2043 sigh wistfully and say, "That must have been a great life one hundred years ago." And we agree with them.

Vivian Greene and Helen Sleeper

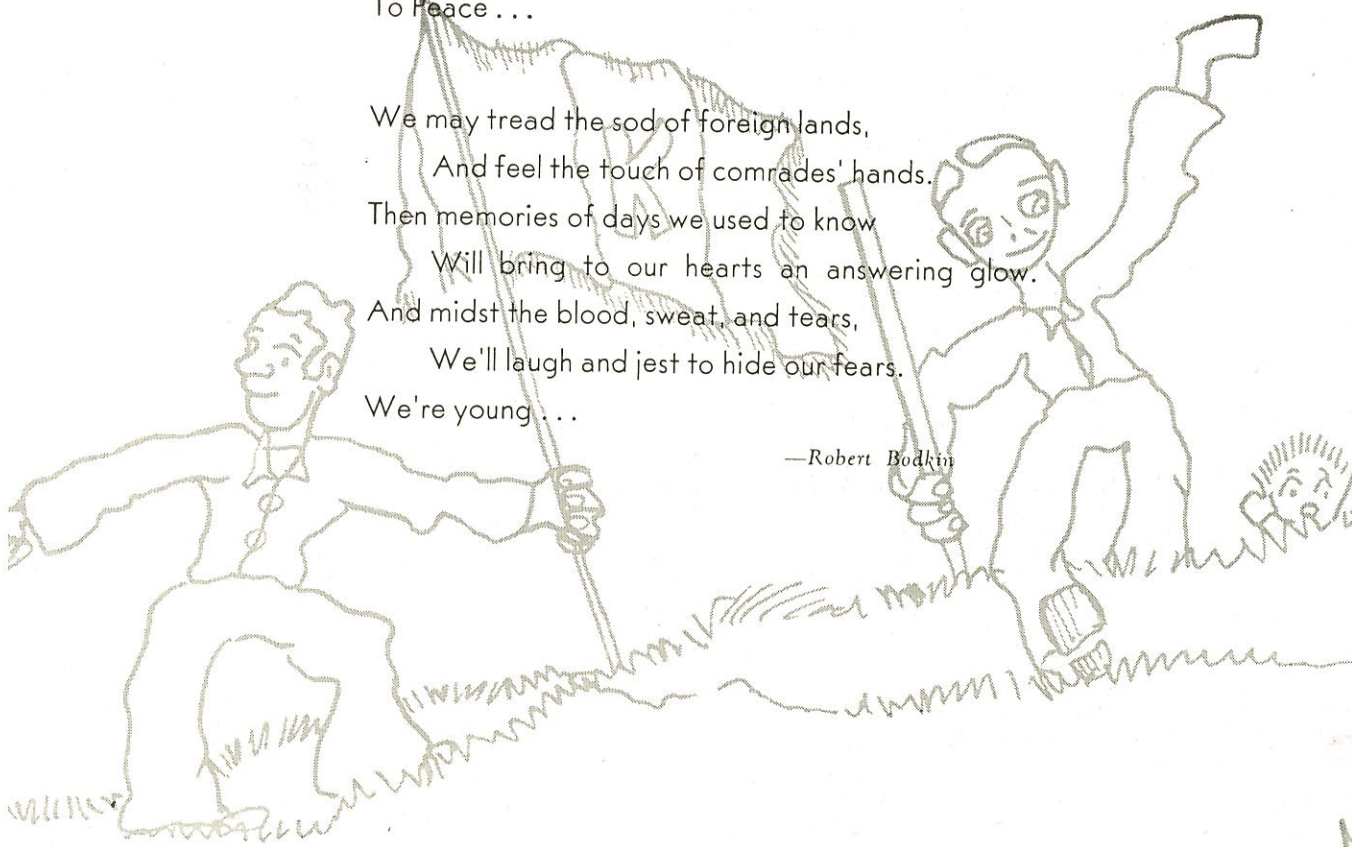

And Now Again . . .

Thoughtfully we close the door
On this last page of familiar lore.
Far too swiftly the hours sped by,
As even now the echoes die.
Then must we face a strange new day
And question not those who say,
"March on . . ."

We lay aside our hopes and dreams;
It matters not how hard it seems.
For while the world in chaos lies,
There can be no rest beneath the skies.
Here the seeds the past has sown
Will see us through the great unknown
To Peace . . .

We may tread the sod of foreign lands,
And feel the touch of comrades' hands.
Then memories of days we used to know
Will bring to our hearts an answering glow.
And midst the blood, sweat, and tears,
We'll laugh and jest to hide our fears.
We're young . . .

—Robert Bodkin

Junior Officers

First Row: Vogt, president; Power, secretary.

Second Row: K. Bush, vice-president; James Moore, treasurer.

AT THE time of this writing, the junior class was planning to hold its semi-formal prom in the Kenmore Senior High gymnasium on May 28 as a climax to a memorable year.

Plans for the year's program were soon under way after officers were elected by the class in September. Those selected were Peter Vogt, president; Kay Bush, vice-president; Joan Power, secretary; and James Moore, treasurer. There were no class advisers this year.

The Junior Show featured the movie, "The Buccaneer," this year and also entertained with the student talent show. A luminous dance was one of the outstanding performances of the evening.

On the eve of the Lincoln Day holiday, February 11, the juniors gave an informal dance in the high school gymnasium, with music furnished by Paul Glynn.

First Row: Catherine Anderson, Mildred Pfeifer, B. Miles, Sarbentos, Andrews, Peterson, G. Patterson, Attmore, Munzert, Popovich, Adamson, Rosen, Biggart, B. Pierce, G. Becker, Osberg, Quernback, Sackman.

Juniors

"We'll now form a single line." Carl Jacobson directed the junior homerooms when they had their "Kenitorial" pictures taken.

Sophomore Officers

First row: J. Murphy, president; R. Walters, treasurer;
D. Dagg, secretary.
Standing: Carlson, vice-president.

HIGHLIGHTING this year's activities for the sophomores was the Sophomore Hop held April 30. Reigning over this affair in the gaily decorated gymnasium were Prince Ross Cochrane and Princess Diane Dagg, selected by the votes of their class mates. Music for the annual affair was furnished by Eddie Charon's orchestra. Despite the war, the Hop held its usual place of importance among sophomore activities. The only notable change was that it was informal instead of semiformal as it had been until this year.

However, this was not the only activity of the sophomores, although it was the most important. Previous to the Hop, the four class officers, James Murphy, president; Pat Carlson, vice-president; Diane Dagg, secretary; and Dick Walters, treasurer, had spent much time making the sophomore moving picture and stage show a success. Miss Joan Searles took charge of this activity held February 18. After the show, a spring dance was held on March 19.
